

---

From: Craig Silverman
To: Dr. Neal Krawetz
Sent: 2/3/2015 3:48:17 PM
Subject: Re: For Emergent (was: Subject: Coverage Question/Idea)

Yep, sign me up for guinea pig duty!

I will follow up with you once I know which quote(s) we would want to use.

Craig

On 3 February 2015 at 14:08, Dr. Neal Krawetz <&lt;a href="mailto:dr.krawetz@hackerfactor.com" target="_blank">dr.krawetz@hackerfactor.com wrote:

On Tue, Feb 03, 2015 at 11:40:46AM -0500, Craig Silverman wrote:
>Thanks, Neal. Yeah, when I do verification training sessions the first >thing I mention is that you still have to, you know, talk to the source!

What? Talk to people? But that 's so old tech!

I live with a librarian. Every year they teach incoming students about the types of data that you cannot find on Google.

>Thanks also for all the info you sent on that goat pic. I realize you 've >been burned by media orgs in the past. Would you be willing to let me quote >from the email if I tell which ones I 'd like to use?

Let me know the quotes. But I don 't see it being too big of an issue.
You seem reliable as far as taking comments in context, not misrepresenting answers, and verifying statements.

One of these days I 'll tell you about Kim Zetter from Wired... I know about a dozen people who won 't do interviews with anyone because they were interviewed by her once. (She wrote a book recently. Without ever seeing the book and knowing nothing about the topic, I bet at least 25% of the content is fictional, misrepresented, or baseless.)

Unrelated:

I 'm looking for a guinea pig to test out a new FotoForensics service.
Are you interested?

-Neal

--

Neal Krawetz, Ph.D.
Hacker Factor Solutions
<http://www.hackerfactor.com/>

--

Craig Silverman

Founder, Emergent

Fellow, Tow Center For Digital Journalism, Columbia University

Twitter | Facebook

514.808.0548

Read the free Verification Handbook:

*http://verificationhandbook.com/*