Dear Andreas,
I have had a look into this and traced where we got the pictures from. We received the story from our office in Russia.
Numerous pictures from the set are from rescue services – these were not exclusive as when our correspondent approached the services we were also supplied with them. The Russian rescuers are credited to the pictures in numerous publications.
The rest of the pictures are non exclusive collects – taken from social network sites with the permission of the families. They are not the copyright of the Siberian Times.
I hope this clears the matter and do drop me a line if you have any further queries,
Thanks, Kathryn

Dear partner,

we have a request from Siberian Times regarding the rights of the following images from Yakutian cannibals story:

Do you have the rights to Syndicate or not?

Best,
Andreas

Dear Action Press Picture Desk,

please can I ask for the contacts of the person from the Central European Agency that sold you the pictures for the Yakutian cannibals story that appeared in Bild, see the link below.

[REDACTED]

As I said to the Bild team, there was no request to purchase the images by anyone at the Action Press; nor there have been one from the Central European News.

It was The Siberian Times exclusive story, and our legal team has checked back with our source that there was no-one else getting these pictures either.

Please can we have the billing address for the Action Press, and we are looking forward for your prompt reply re-CEN contact person that sold you the images.

kind regards,

Svetlana Skarbo
The Siberian Times editor
